Stipends for Social Justice Internships for Follen Youth Summer 2019

The Follen Church Brown Fund for Youth Social Justice Training has funds available for summer 2019 internships for Follen high school and college-aged youth to get involved in social justice work. There are many possibilities, and you are welcome to pursue your own idea for an organizational placement. Funding is also available for social justice programming at the UU General Assembly June 19-23 in Spokane. www.uua.org

Here are some possible opportunities:

The UU College of Social Justice (U.S. & international locations) offers summer internships for emerging young adults (ages 18-25) who wish to deepen their engagement with social justice and discover new ways to put their faith into action. UUCSJ's goal is to offer young adults a first-hand experience of grassroots justice work along with framework that helps them explore potential career paths as well as their own spiritual development. Small Planet Institute (Cambridge) focuses on solutions: From the crisis of needless hunger to that of democracy itself, we offer evidence-based, life-serving frames of understanding that enable us to perceive and join in solutions emerging all around us. There are several possible types of work available at Small Planet. www.smallplanet.org

The Louis D. Brown Peace Institute (Boston) works to create and sustain an environment where all families can live in peace and all people are valued. The Peace Institute's programs and services are grounded in the a social-ecological framework that interventions are needed at multiple levels to interrupt cycles of violence.
